

I'm not hearing back

You have applied for a number of positions that are closely aligned to your skill set. You deem the opportunity to be realistic in terms of your qualifications and experience, but your applications continue to fail. What are you doing wrong?

Recruitment agencies in particular often receive multiple applications from the same candidate. It's worth considering if this is you and if so, what can be done to improve your chances? If one application has been unsuccessful it is worth revamping your CV and reproaching the company, client or agency in 6 months time. It's not healthy to bombard a prospective recipient with your CV lots of times particularly without changes.

A robust application goes a long way. Your CV is an artifice, it does not tell the reader how communicative you are, how confident, articulate or how capable you believe that you are. Additionally if your CV does not detail every given role and experience it is unlikely you will receive your desired outcome.

Our download on thompsonandterry.co.uk contains a CV template. If you are struggling, please use this template and build your CV. This may assist you in your search for work.